The Wellesley Centers for Women

Since 1974, the Wellesley Centers for Women has been a driving force, both behind the scenes and in the spotlight, promoting positive change for women and families. All work is grounded in the perspectives of women from diverse backgrounds. Our research and action projects lead to creative solutions and innovative policy alternatives to a range of pressing social concerns. The Wellesley Centers for Women is the single organization formed in 1995 by combining the Center for Research on Women (founded 1974) and the Stone Center for Developmental Studies (founded 1981) at Wellesley College.

WCW conducts scholarly research and develops sound training and evaluation programs that place women’s experiences at the center of its work. WCW focuses on three major areas:

- The status of women and girls and the advancement of their human rights both in the United States and around the globe;
- The education, care, and development of children and youth; and
- The emotional well-being of families and individuals.

Issues of diversity and equity are central across all the work as are the experiences and perspectives of women from a variety of backgrounds and cultures. For more information, please visit: www.wcwonline.org.

Introduction

As part of its global strategy to promote the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities (CRPD) in development activities and to mainstream disability in all aspects of its work, the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA); the Secretariat for the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities (SCRPD/DESA) and the Wellesley Centers for Women (WCW) at Wellesley College have developed a unique compilation of resource materials on innovative approaches to promote the human rights of persons with disabilities, especially women and children in inclusive people-centered development.

Disability Rights, Gender, and Development: A Resource Tool for Action provides valuable insights on the theory and practice of human rights-based approaches to development and contributes to this body of knowledge by designing innovative approaches to the implementation of the CPRD in gender and child sensitive development activities. Building on existing experience in other human rights conventions, with a focus on the linkages among the CRPD, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination Against Women (CEDAW), and the Convention on the Rights of the Child (CRC), the resource manual is designed to provide an intersectional analysis of the different treaties and build capacity among all stakeholders to use the normative frameworks of the different conventions within a holistic framework of interrelated rights. The first draft of these materials was developed for a pilot training program by the author in August 2008 for DESA staff members on the “Human Rights Based Approaches to Development in the Context of Disability Rights”.

The three overarching goals of the resource manual are to:

- Increase the knowledge base to support and guide global efforts on inclusive development in line with the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities
- Strengthen the knowledge base to respond to the growing needs to support the implementation of the Convention through a human rights-based approach to development.
- Incorporate the gender perspective in ANY disability action: law/policy making, and programming to promote the rights of persons with disabilities.

A hallmark of the new Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities (2006) is its distinctive focus on an integrated approach to human rights and development and the promotion of the rights of persons with disabilities in all aspects of development. CRPD specifically include the reproductive rights of persons with disabilities as addressed in Article 23 and rights to sexual and reproductive health in Article 25. This is consonant with the new target on universal access to reproductive health by 2015 of Millennium Development Goal 5: improving maternal health, reproductive rights and sexual and reproductive health which cover a state of physical, mental and social wellbeing are not only critical to the advancement of disability, gender and development, but also a key interface among them.

The work of the United Nations to pursue the goal of “full participation of persons with disabilities in all aspects of society and development” is rooted in two main policy instruments: World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons (1982) and the Standard Rules on Equalization of Opportunities for Persons with Disabilities (1993) which are both powerful tools to promote equality and empowerment of persons with disabilities.

A series of international development conferences and summits in the 1990s and their respective five-year reviews and follow-ups are of significant importance to persons with disabilities and their communities worldwide, particularly on issues such as poverty eradication, income generation, physical accessibility, advancement of women, adequate and accessible shelter as well as critical development issues recently addressed by the international community in environmental or food crisis.

In view of the urgent need to promote the disability rights-development discourse at local, national regional and international levels and mainstream disability in all aspects of implementation, monitoring and evaluation of the internationally agreed development goals such as the MDGs, this resource is envisaged to contribute to promoting the disability perspective in development and provide a basis for future activities and programmes.

It is hoped that this resource will contribute to practical action to effect positive changes on the ground- for persons with disabilities and their communities around the world.

A Road Map to the Disability Rights, Gender, and Development: Resource Tool

This resource tool builds a normative framework to examine the intersections of disability rights and gender in the human rights based approach to development. Through case studies, good practices and analyses the research tool makes recommendation and illustrates effective tools for the implementation of gender and disability sensitive laws, policies and development initiatives. The selected areas of discussion and analysis include: equality and non-discrimination; violence against women with disabilities; traditional and customary practices that violate the rights of women and children with disabilities; sexual and reproductive health and rights of women and youth with disabilities; access to employment; and inclusive education. The tool is intended to educate, raise awareness and mobilize and galvanize groups around the twin goals of disability and gender sensitivity in development.

Disability rights cannot be guaranteed in a context that does not affirm the equality of all women. Given that women with disabilities are some of the most marginalized segments of a community, a recognition of the multiple identities of women and children with disabilities and how that can construct their experiences of multiple forms of discrimination will help shape better development programmes and rights-based laws and policies.

Using the Convention on the Rights of the Child (CRC) and the Convention on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW) and the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities (CRPD) together enables a more comprehensive human rights-based approach that takes into account specific vulnerabilities based on age, gender, and disability that result in violence and discrimination against women and children and women and children with disabilities. The three treaties also bring comparative strengths to the overall pursuit of all women’s and children’s rights. In combining the mandates of all three treaties, supported by the overall framework of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, a powerful rights framework emerges to vindicate the rights of women and children within the private and public spheres.

This resource tool for the first time examines the connection between gender and disability in development and analyzes how gender, disability and development converge and intersect. On the other hand, the CRPD complements and intersects with the CEDAW and the CRC and a gender perspective must be integrated into all aspects of disability rights. In turn, disability rights perspectives must inform the landscape of lawmaking for women and children in order to effectively transform the CRPD into concrete action in the domestic sphere.

The resource tool is divided into three modules and each module includes case studies and concrete action steps to guide human rights practice and the development agenda on the ground. The resource modules will be useful tools to UN country offices, government agencies, civil society organizations and academic institutions as background materials for education or training workshops for the development of new legislative, policy or programmatic initiatives on behalf of women and children with disabilities. A preliminary draft of this resource tool was used for a successful training program conducted by the author for the United Nations Secretariat for the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities (SCRPD/DESA).

Module One: This module examines the fundamental principles of the human rights-based approach and the domestic human rights framework and examines how they apply in the field of disability rights. This module also explores the cross cutting nature of the human rights treaties that guarantee the rights of women and children and how these human rights values can be incorporated into national laws. A recommended action plan sets out a check list on how these treaties can be integrated into laws, policies and programmes.

Module Two: This module builds a framework to advance the rights of women and children with disabilities and makes the critical call for a gender analysis to be integrated into the development and implementation of all disability laws policies and programmes. Similarly, an argument is made for a disability rights perspective to inform all areas of laws, policies and programmes that affect women’ and children’s lives. Using case studies to illustrate the multiple identities of women with disabilities and the multiple grounds of discrimination against women and children with disabilities, this module examines the mutually reinforcing framework of women’s, children’s and disability rights in selected areas and provides recommendations for law, policy and programme reform in these intersecting areas. A shared form of analysis that joins gender and disability rights analysis can help identify the gaps in the legal system that can be filled through the congruence of the CEDAW, CRC and CRPD.

Module Three: The final module explores the relationship between Human Rights and the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) and the connection between disability and the MDGs with a special focus on the rights of women with disabilities and their rights to reproductive health. This module develops a plan of action for the participation of all persons with disabilities, including women and children with disabilities in all areas of development in their communities.

Appendix 1: This chart maps some cross cutting areas of the CEDAW, CRC and CRPD.
Appendix 2: This chart identifies some of the intersecting areas of the CEDAW/CRC/ICESCR treaty body Concluding Observations to the most recent Asian country reports.
Appendix 3: This chart compares and contrasts some of the core provisions of the current disability laws in the Asian region.
Appendix 4: This chart examines other international human rights norms that mention the rights of persons with disabilities.
